Dr. Karni Singh Shooting Ranges (Dr. KSSR), located in South Delhi near the historic Tughlakabad Fort, stands as one of India's premier shooting facilities. Developed for the 1982 Asian Games and comprehensively upgraded ahead of the 2010 Commonwealth Games, Dr. KSSR currently functions as a National Centre of Excellence (NCOE) under the Sports Authority of India (SAI). The centre trains over 160 athletes and regularly hosts national coaching camps and major international competitions, including the upcoming ISSF Junior World Cup 2025.

In support of its high-performance training and competition ecosystem, a total of 245 SIUS Ascor target systems (across 10m, 25m, 50m and Finals ranges) and 6 Laporte shotgun trap machines were installed during the last major upgradation phase in 2009–10. These systems have consistently supported a wide array of national and international shooting competitions and intensive athlete training programs over the years.

As part of a planned infrastructure renewal and modernization initiative to align with current global standards and technological advancements in shooting sport, new-generation target systems and shotgun machines are scheduled to be installed shortly at the facility. Accordingly, the existing equipment — which has served its purpose effectively and reliably — is now being phased out and proposed to be auctioned as per applicable government norms and procedures.

A detailed list of the equipment being offered for auction, along with their respective base prices, is provided below.
